

The golden couple wins it all in Edmonton

Damaris Brix and husband Peter were the class of the field for the first annual Dansol Open Racketlon championships. Being BC reigning badminton doubles champions as well as being expert squash players, the two over 45 players showed their younger opponents that fresh legs is no match for experience. This was especially true in the men's final when finalist Cory Shannon, a very good tennis player, was in a good situation, needing to keep Peter below 14. Brix was down 19-10 and the outcome looked grim for him. This was before the X (like in Brix) factor came in. Cory's serves started to be shaky while Peter's consistency went up a notch. Not only did Peter reach 14-20 to force a gummi-arm (tie-breaker) he also scored the last point to win the match by one point. Bronze went to Danny Shannon (Cory's father) who defeated Racketlon Canada president, Rod Bedard.
